Several years ago heavy rain hit a city and made the river rise. When the rain stopped, people found that a dog swam across the river to an island three times a day for two weeks. Why? Because her four children were on the island. She swam there every day to milk her babies.

Animals know love as we humans do, and the dog is only one of them. The scientist Jane Smith spent fourteen years living with chimpanzees (猩猩) in Africa. She found that chimpanzees cared for each other when others got hurt or lost their parents. "It is not only humans but animals, who are responsible," she said.

Two birds in Kunming showed their parental love. Their baby was hurt and fell on the road in the centre of the city. Cars were driving past but the brave parents flew down to the road and took their baby bird away with their claws (爪子).

Animals not only love their own children, but also care for other animal babies. A chimpanzee named Anjana in an animal centre takes care of a baby lion. She feeds the lion carefully every day. "They are just like mother and son," a worker of the centre said.
