Pandora fell in love with Prometheus’s brother and they got married. As a wedding gift, Zeus gave Pandora a very small, very beautiful box. He told her that whatever happened, she must never, ever open the box.

Pandora sat looking at the box day after day. “What is inside?” she would ask herself. She thought and thought until she could think no more. Finally she made up her mind to open the box.

She was met with a terrible shock, for there was everything that was bad in the world inside the box: sadness, hunger, disease and pain. These things flew out and filled the room, before leaving the window to join the world. Pandora closed the lid of the box quickly.

Pandora’s husband returned. When he heard what had happened, he told Pandora to open the box one last time. Nothing left could be worse than what had already come. Then the chemistry teacher did an experiment to discover what was in the bronze ware.

This kind of class is not new for students at Shanghai Luwan Middle School. In 2013, the school began to open interdisciplinary (跨学科的) classes. Teachers in different subjects can have a class together. It makes students learn knowledge in different ways. More than 20 interdisciplinary classes have come out.

Students are excited about this kind of class. “I really look forward to what new ideas our teachers will bring to us. And they always surprise us,” said Chen Fei, a 15-year-old eighth-grader. Once, she had an ancient poem (古诗) class about lotus (莲花). Students can choose their favourite ways to understand the poem, including painting lotus, singing the poem, and learning dances about lotus. “I chose painting and created my own lotus works. I not only fully understood the poem through painting, but also mastered some painting skills. It was fun,” Chen said.

Liang Jingjing, 15, thinks this kind of class helps her connect subjects to each other. She had a class taught by her physics teacher and chemistry teacher. Her teachers amazed her by making a boiled egg enter a glass bottle. “To understand the chemical experiment and what it resulted in, we also had to learn physics knowledge,” she said.
